SEVENTY-SEVEN RECEIVE DEGREES

University College of Medicine Holds Commencement Exercises.

ADDRESS BY C. A. SMITH, PH. D.

Dean of the University of North Carolina Makes Great Speech,

The University College of Medicine held the Academy of Music. The house was packed with friends of the college and the applause was hearty. For the first time the red and white colors of the college were in evidence, both on the diplomas and in the decoration of the theatre. Several hundred persons wer turned away from the Academy, so great as the desire of the people of Richmond to show their appreciation of the University College of Medicine, and to ear the address of Dr. C. Alphonso Smith, professor of English and dean of the graduate department of the University of North Carolina, and a scholar sity of North Carelina, and a scholar of national reputation.

The college was founded twelve years ago by Dr. Hunter McGuire, whose reputation as a physician and surgeon was world-wide, and whose fostering care placed the institution in the front rank in which it stands to-day.

The seal of the college is an impression of the statue of Dr. McGuire, which adorns the Capitol Square and stands next to his great commander, General Stonewall Jackson. When the graduating class, seventy-eight in number, in caps and gowns, entered, the applause was deafening.

Suggests Means by Which the United States May Extend Foreign Trade.

ATLANTA, GA, May, 18.—An audince gathered from every part of the United States and representing the organized and invested capital of the coun try, greeted Secretary Victor H. Metcalf, of the Department of Commerce and Labor here to-night. He delivered an address on the commercial possibilities of the country and the necessity for developing foreign trade. The address was de-Association of Manufacturers, who had finished the business of their tenth anfinished the business of their tenth annual convention earlier in the day.
Secretary Metcalf had spent the day under the care of a physician, suffering from a mainrial attack. He began his discussion by declaring and establishing his statements by figures, that the South within the last decade and at the present time has grown and is growing in commercial importance and manufacturers more rapidly than any other section of the country. Her population and every product of the soil, her iron and coal production, showed a higher per centage of increase than the United States as a whole.

increase than the United States as whole.

Mr. Metcaif said that the United States leads the world as a manufacturing country, the value of her products being equal to that of Great Britain, France and Germany combined, whereas in 1860, the United States was lowest in this respect of the four nations. The total value of her manufactures in 1900 was approximately, $13,000,000,000.

Excess of Imports.

In spite of this fact the United States, the greatest manufacturing country, exports but five hundred milions of the four billions of dollars of manufactured goods which enter into the world's international ways of the base of the country of the which enter into the world's international rade. Since 1898, the United States has led the world in the export of domestic products—the products of our fields and mines, bread-stuffs, meats, coal, cotton, timber, iron, copper, mineral oil for fillumination—and the world takes all we can produce in excess of our own demands. Of our manufactured products coler should girls per cent, finds its way only about eight per cent, finds its way to foreign markets. The remaining 92 per cent, are consumed by our own pop-ulation.

The production of our manufactures is one,000,000, fifteen times more than in 1850; while the population has hardly more than quadrupled since that year. Mr. Metcalf, declared that Europe is the great competitor, of the United States in the markets of the world, Germany in particular, having an increasing hold on foreign markets in which Great Britain is a close second. He stated the markets are found everywhere, often in the countries located geographically nearer to the United States than to the countries which supply them.

He further stated that the exports of the United States to many of these 000,000,000, fifteen times more than in 1850

pean competitors of the United States produce and pack their goods in form and conditions suited to the markets which they are intended to supply. Lesson From Cotton Industry.

Lesson From Cotton Industry.

The United States to-day is the greatest producer of raw cotton. England is the greatest manufacturer of cotton goods. She buys annually three million bales from this country; she manufactures this with English labor into yarns and cloth and after supplying her home markets; she exports manufactured cotton goods to the value of $39,00,000, a product greater than that of all the American mills combined. A large share of this product comes back to the United States, The United States produces three-quarters of the world's supply of raw cotton, yet her exports of the manufactured cotton last year was twenty-two million dollars, a decrease of ten million dollars from 1903.

Following this comparison with others covering different manufactures of this country. Secretary Metealf closed with a declaration of the position occupied by the department, of which he is the head, to the manufacturing and commercial interests of the United States, its labor and shipping interests and the fostering care which it extends over all. The trial was continued.
